Male contribution to embryo competence for implantation A number of investigators have suggested that low sperm quality can decrease the success of assisted reproductive techniques (ART) due to abnormalities in chromatin arrangements and compactions in the sperm, as well as increased DNA fragmentation [ 77 - 105 ].

Recurrent Implantation Failure: The Role of the Endometrium

The main focus of the study was on the role of endometrium and the movement of embryo during implantation in the uterine cavity. The purpose of this review article was to emphasize the importance of the endometrial changes, embryo endometrial interaction and their impact as critical points on failure of implantation process.

Can the immune system have an impact on implantation ...

The presence of NKs in the uterus facilitates embryo implantation and the formation of blood vessels. However, this function needs to be balanced because an elevated response by NK cells could cause excess cell cytotoxicity. HLA-G in the embryo modulates NK cell activity. Recent research suggests that there needs to be compatibility between the KIR and HLA-G in order for a pregnancy to

What role does the immune system play in fertility ...

Therefore, the embryo implantation process and correct development of the pregnancy depend on a delicate balance that allows two immunologically different individuals to tolerate one another. The immune system protects the organism from foreign cells and from illnesses.
